Reading – 30 minutes

I) You are going to read three sets of clauses about six different forms of transport in cities. Read the first set of clauses on the left (A-F), and to each add a clause from set 2 and then a clause from set 3.

Set 1	Set 2	Set 3
A The great advantage of buses is that they can carry a large number of people,	i and they also contribute to the pollution of the city air through their exhaust fumes,	a you to take very much with you, or to travel with friends.
B Taxis can, of course, only carry a small number of people at a time	ii but most of them are powered by diesel, which makes them noisy and smelly,	b so, where this is the case and where the streets are relatively free of other vehicles, this is an attractive and convenient method of transport.
C Private cars are generally agreed to be the worst form of urban transport and while some cities have had the courage to ban them from their streets,	iii putting riders at risk from heavy traffic like cars and lorries, and it does not enable	c the fact that parking is always a problem, and one which is going to become worse and worse.
D Underground railways have the great advantage of being unheard but they are very expensive	iv to build, and the few cities that already have them also face huge maintenance costs,	d although this is a problem which is being overcome in many cities by the introduction of electrically-powered vehicles.
E Tram rails are a traditional sight in most city streets	v there is strong opposition from those who see it as an attack on their personal freedom, despite	e yet they have the advantage of being able to travel from door to door, and avoiding parking problems by keeping on the move.
F Bicycles are an excellent way of getting around in cities but cycling can be dangerous,	vi and this form of transport is still popular, with many systems extended and modernised	f which, however, may be outbalanced by the efficiency and relatively low environmental impact of such a system.

In each of the following sentences the gap has been filled with an incorrect word. Most of these mistakes have occurred because the person who filled in the gaps didn't read the whole sentence carefully enough.

0 The next train arrive at platform four is the 20.10 for Manchester.

'The next train arrive' is the wrong form of the verb – it doesn't fit with 'train'; and when you read to the end of the sentence, you see the main verb: 'is the 20.10'. Correct word: 'arriving'.

When I first saw Louise, I got completely the wrong impression of her. Louise is a mouse. She is a girl. How have I understood it? She's very smart, and there is a little pony-tail on her head (just the way I had on my head on a day when I first met her). What about that day? It was the 25th of September. I had just come from school, so I started doing my homework. In a second I heard a sound like: "pi-pi-pi." near my wardrobe. At first, I was frightened because my thoughts were about big, dangerous and angry mouse-man! I thought that Louise was a boy).

The weather was bad, nasty and rainy. These facts made me more scared. After a few days I saw her again and I understood that she's not so awful.

Now I know that Louise is very kind because she didn't eat the snack which I gave her. I think that she wanted me to eat this cheese. And, of course, my girl is very musical, cause her song makes me feel crazy (in a good sense).

The last day when I saw her was yesterday. But today we are gonna meet. I need to tell her about all about school, home. I really want to tell her about my friends and our jokes. The place where we'll meet is my room.

Louise is very good friend. She really likes to listen to my stories and endure my laugh. I am very happy that I have a friend like that!
